

OOXML not suitable for Norwegian government, says study

Contributed by LXer Linux News
Tuesday, 09 February 2010

Microsoft's XML-based office document format, OOXML, does not meet the requirements for governmental use, according to a new report published by the Norwegian Agency for Public Management and eGovernment (DIFI). The agency wants to start a debate over the report as part of its work on standards in the Norwegian government.

Microsoft's XML-based office document format, OOXML, does not meet the requirements for governmental use, according to a new report published by the Norwegian Agency for Public Management and eGovernment (DIFI). The agency wants to start a debate over the report as part of its work on standards in the Norwegian government.

Read more at: <http://computerworld.co.nz/news.nsf/technology/ooxml-not-suitable-for-norwegian-government-says-study>.