

Open Source Saves the Day

Contributed by LXer Linux News
Wednesday, 10 March 2010

Case studies of open source success are always useful - especially when, like this one, they show how a UK government project that cost £100 million ($150 million) using traditional approaches but still didn't work properly, was fixed for just £35,000 ($53,000) using free software.

Case studies of open source success are always useful - especially when, like this one, they show how a UK government project that cost £100 million ($150 million) using traditional approaches but still didn't work properly, was fixed for just £35,000 ($53,000) using free software.

Read more at: <http://www.computerworlduk.com/community/blogs/index.cfm?blogid=14&entryid=2843>.